USING PINTEREST FOR INTERIOR DESIGN PROJECTS

In the past, part of our design process included encouraging our clients to cut out magazine photos of items such as furnishing and accessories, as well as interior spaces they like (or just as helpful, didn't like). This method not only clarifies the client's own vision for the spaces they want to remodel, but also expedites our design process in giving us visuals by which to better understand a client's style and aesthetics.

Pinterest made this practice much more fun and much easier for both the client and designer, and it has been a great new tool in our business as well! We keep communication and visual ideas flowing between the design team and the client as we both are "pinning" photos that seem relevant to the project at hand. Many of these images then serve as "talking points" for further exploration. In some cases, we discard an idea because it is not the direction we are going to pursue, but that too, is valuable in clarifying the client's vision for the project. Pinterest is a great way to see all the choices gathered in one place for review and decision making.
